TO THE READER.

In this work, Dr. Noah Webster's key to the Pronunciation of long, short and occasional sounds of vowels, diphthongs and consonants is adopted ; and the origin, meaning, application, and correct spelling and pronunciation of unusual words and names are given briefly in foot notes thus :—1 Am'per-sand. The name of the character &. 2 An'a-dem, Greek ανάδημα, A garland ; chaplet or wreath.

The Alliteration contains about five hundred lines, and more than two thousand words, and all words, except those of the foot notes, and some on the title page begin with the letter A.

THE ARGUMENT.

It must be observed that the cardinal virtue of Temperance has hitherto chiefly appeared in a prose dress; sometimes quite plain, and sometimes very natty and picturesque, but seldom in the soft velvet, or glossy satin, or gorgeous brocade and delicate lace of real poetry, and never in the rich poetical costume of apt Alliteration's artful adaptation. The making of this unique garment for the sweet angel of Temperance, has been a very difficult but delightful task; and now, thus attired, she goes forth to strew her blessings all over the world.

Observe further. The whole Alphabet is brought into a Temperance Convention, of which every letter is a member. They organize by electing Ampersand (&) chairman, and decorate him with a wreath or chaplet. He makes an alliterated address and the organization is completed by electing the letter Z assistant chairman, and the letter X secretary. Then the letter A is called to deliver an address, which he does, using no words whatever but those which begin with A.

Most respectfully submitted, "pro bono publico," by the AUTHOR.

⁵ The word ALCOHOL, (al'ko-hol), is derived from two Arabic words, al, the, and kahol, a fine impalpable powder, with which the eastern ladies tinge their hair and the edges of their eyelids, to enhance their beauty.

Dr. Shaw—an eminent Oriental traveler of fifty years ago—says, that “none of the women of Barbary think themselves completely dressed," and their toilet finished, "till they have tinged their hair and the edges of their eyelids with al'-ka-hol, the powder of lead ore." From this impalpable powder the name, in its present form, Alcohol, is applied to other subtle substances, especially the spirit or principle of fermented and distilled liquors which inebriates or produces drunkenness.

Asseverated, and actually

Ascertained,—an apt Arab Alchemist,¹

Artfully attempting an Alkahest,²

(As artless and astonished Author, all Amazed), adduced and announced Alcohol;³

¹ “ Arab Alchemist ;”—It is said the Chinese knew the art of distillation long before it was known in any other part of the world ; but it remained for an Arabian chemist 800 or 900 years ago first to obtain clear and distinct Alcohol while searching for a universal solvent.

² Al'ka-hest,—A pretended universal solvent. Also written Al-cahest.

³ Alcohol is produced by the double process of destructive and constructive chemistry. By subjecting to saccharine fermentation certain vegetable bodies as potatoes, corn, rye and barley, which contain a large amount of amylum or starch, the starch is thereby changed into glucose or grape sugar. Then follows the vinous fermentation which changes the glucose into carbonic acid gas and Alcohol, and then as the Alcohol is separated from the residu-
